Woman's virtue is man's greatest invention.

—CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER (1901–1979)
American writer

Sunday 2/9/14

5:30 am

Day 3

Another sleepless night. My mind just won't shut off. Been thinking about how I am not ready to die. There are too many special occasions I'm not willing to miss. I want to be here for Lukas' and Jeffreys weddings. I want to be there when all my grandchildren are born and for their birthdays and graduations, christmases and first bicycle rides. I have to beat this I am strong and not ready to accept this as my fate.

Have I mentioned how much I adore my husband and can't bare the thought of not holding him in my arms and sharing every important and ratine moment with him. We had so much to look forward to after 2 difficult years of loss. This is so unfair to Mike. Fortunately he is so loved that I know family and friends will be there for him.

Ok - time to move out of this depressing funk. Later this morning we are meeting our friends Diane and Richard for brunch. It will be so great to hear how Diane is doing with her health issues. - finally having a dx after such a long time. Can't wait to see them.

6:30 pm

This was a good day. We met Diane & Richard for brunch at Watercourse and it was so good to hear how things are coming together for Diane and her health. I do hope this new doctor who specializes in Lime Disease will be able to help her. It was nice to not talk about me and focus on other things