What a wonderful weekend. Lukas and Kristin were here and although our time together was short it was great. Spending time with Lukas is so good for my soul. I love him so much and it brings me joy to see him so happy with Kristin, whom Mike and I adore. I do hope it is a lasting relationship. They really seem to be very happy together which is great for me to see.

It is always sad to see Luke leave but I totally understand. I'm so proud of him and know that he will do exceptionally well in the C.U. Manager training program and his slings will take off very soon. I'm already looking forward to their next visit in Oct for the race.

Yesterday was a difficult day. My Doctor showed us the latest MRI in comparison to the last 2 and it wasn't good. The GBM is progressing so much sooner and faster than expected. Clearly the Temodar didn't work. So we have a new treatment plan. I will give Avastin a try. I start next Wed and will be spending every other wed in the infusion clinic from now on. It hopefully will help with managing my symptoms. I've been having many more headaches over the past few weeks. I told myself they were from the Temodar, but they must likely are from the tumor.

I cried last night, which I don't do often. It really is happening. Any glimmer of hope that I had that maybe, just maybe I could beat this, was shattered while listening to Dr Eudens tell me the results and what is ahead.
