

I don't know if I have 2 months or 8 months. All I can do is live every day and hope that when it gets towards the end, I'm not too much of a burden on Mike.

Oh, I love my husband so very much and hate the thought of cutting our journey together short. I just want to spend every minute with him. He has been the BEST partner, lover, friend and caregiver that I could have ever hoped for.

Mike is working from home today as he did yesterday. I guess after our last MRI result he wants to be more available. I love him for that and I'm grateful to KP for offering him so much flexibility.

Saturday we spent the afternoon with Jeff, Alison, Ansley and Elliot. It was so enjoyable. I wish I had more energy to play more with Ansley. It is fun watching her but I'm afraid she won't remember me at all because I haven't spent enough time with her.

When they come over I've been gravitating towards Elliot simply because she is easier for me and doesn't wear me out. I really love both these girls so much and wish I had more time to get to know them and they know me. Unfortunately that is not likely to happen. I hope Mike and Alison tell them repeatedly just how much I loved them.
